CHORRÜCKWANDFENSTER.

This architectural drawing shows the choir window of Angicourt church. It is a large, arched window with a complex tracery pattern. The window is divided into three main sections by vertical mullions. Each section contains a large, circular window with a decorative tracery pattern. The entire window is set within a large, arched frame. The drawing shows the structural details of the window, including the mullions, tracery, and the supporting structure below.

This architectural drawing shows the base of the choir window. It features a decorative frieze with three small, arched openings. The frieze is supported by a series of small, decorative columns. The drawing shows the structural details of the base, including the columns, frieze, and the supporting structure below.
